

September - October 2019

Spring is now upon us, and we are starting to see a little more settled weather. At the same time, there has been a focus on Mental Health, with Mental Health Week, in New Zealand.

As you know, mental wellbeing is an important part of our Health & safety journey and we are committed through our Cornerstone belief of manaaki (support) to build greater awareness of looking after your own, and being aware of others', mental wellbeing. So, we are now rolling out nationally Mental Health First Aid courses across New Zealand.

On a lighter (but no less important) note, we know the frustrations and stress that arises from IT systems, so I'm pleased that there is an article on the large number of upgrades that are underway within the IT space that will mean better, faster and more efficient operational and customer service.

With customers, we have recently concluded a very positive and constructive workshop with Auckland Council, using the same facilitator that ran our City of Sydney Workshop. We've had great feedback and are keen to roll this out to more of our customers.

Lastly, on the sustainability and great outdoors front, we have excellent articles on the Waiheke Island Walking Festival, including an introduction to our in-house "forest-bathing" expert, and the amazing work our Brisbane team are doing to beautify the City of Brisbane.

So, until I see you next in person (and I will be touring the depots in October) stay safe and well, and look after yourselves.

Kind regards

James Fletcher

Partnership

Waiheke Walking Festival

If you work outdoors, you probably know the therapeutic effect trees can have on you, but many Kiwis don't!

We are proud to share this episode from Seven Sharp featuring Richard Margesson, our team leader in the Environmental Control Division on Waiheke Island, who knows a thing or two about what "forest bathing" can do for your mental health.

Client Workshop

Auckland Council

In 2017, we became Auckland Council's main supplier of tree maintenance services.

We found the workshop format is the most productive way of identifying key areas to enhance our relationships.
